What if you had the tools to be able to recognize people for who they are, and not what they say they are, accept them for it, and move forward either with or without them in your own journey towards being a better human? Sometimes it's easier than others, however training your mind to recognize these 'red flags' if you will, can be difficult. We've all had healthy and unhealthy experiences in our lives. This book is about a single life, that navigated the same types of situations, and some of the things observed while doing so, as well as the historical recount of the path of navigation that was taken to become a better human along the way. This is the worlds first experiential training book, and is about the concept of the human being on earth attempting to better itself, and the place we all know, but rarely speak about, where the faces may change, but the characters remain the same. It offers a stage from which, to be able to see your life, so that you can empower yourself to make the better decisions you've wanted to make about life, work, relationships, and self worth. It's about the journey towards awareness, which isn't all it's cracked up to be, through the eyes of the mind, and attempts to educate the reader about the experiences in life that are opportunities to make better decisions for themselves, however 'better' is defined by your life. No matter how big or small the experience, the event, plus our reaction, equals the outcome, and ultimately those outcomes stack up to make us the people who we are. This book offers some tools to recognize the opportunity to effect your reaction, in order to the effect the cumulative outcomes, and ultimately who you want to be.
