Excerpt from Ned Nigger an' Gent'man: A Story of War and Reconstruction Days

"Good evening, sir!"

The man who extended this salutation was a traveler in a Southern State on the Atlantic border a few years after the close of the war between the States. He was mounted on a superb saddle-horse, and his voice, dress, and bearing betokened that he was a man of intelligence and good breeding. The person to whom the salutation was addressed had not heard or noticed the approach of the traveler, and was not aware of his presence until he heard him speak. The contrast presented by the two was most striking.

The one was a white man, the other a negro. The white man was a little above medium height, his hair was slightly gray, and though he was, perhaps, sixty years of age, he looked younger. The negro was over six feet in height, his hair almost snow white, and he looked seventy years of age or more.

The white man was dressed in a traveling-suit of fashionable cut and fine texture; the negro was dressed in the garments of a laborer, but his clothing was clean and bore evidence of having been well cared for.
